Still a good game, especially for the type of game it is, and the kind of game it is. Overall, it's an easy game to play, even if it is "point and click" for most of it. You can tell it's a movie-game (like watching a movie) because of the cutscenes and dialog, and because it doesn't have the game play of a first person shooter. Even if it is point and click, you're still driving, shooting, and evading. Its story is pretty good, and there's a bit of a dramatic arc to it, although it isn't anywhere near as dramatic or emotional as the movie. It is kind of dumb, but kind of funny. It's not a game you'd play for hours, but it's enjoyable enough for a couple of hours of random, mindless fun. The game has two pretty good endings, too, though the second one is pretty much a repeat of the first. The game doesn't take itself too seriously, though, and that makes it kind of endearing. Also, the game has a pretty good voice acting, and the voices do the job pretty well. However, the music isn't very good, and you don't have the option to play the music for you. The graphics are very good, especially for the kind of game it is. The cutscenes are good, and the level of detail is very good. The character designs are ok, but some of the animation looks a little out of place. One of the characters looks so cartoony that I had to look it up to make sure it was the right character. But all in all, the graphics are good, and the game does run really well on my Intel i7 and Nvidia GTX680. The sound is good. The sounds for the different weapons and for the character are good. The sound effects are good, too. It all sounds realistic enough that it doesn't feel like you're listening to music. There is only one sound effect that kind of bugs me though. There is a really loud squeal when the player falls off a cliff. Overall, the music and sound effects are good, and the game looks good, too. It has nice visuals, and it runs well on
