Apr. 12, 2013 | Written by Krissi Rigg The Detroit News The city of Detroit has removed a ban on people from wearing full beards and mustaches after the controversial policies were challenged in court. The city's Office of Municipal Law had allowed the beard and mustache policies to remain in place as the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit reviewed an earlier ruling that found the ban violated the First Amendment. "The city has a substantial interest in preventing conflicts and appearances of impropriety in city offices," said the opinion from Judge Judith Rogers, a U.S. district court judge in Cincinnati who had issued a temporary restraining order to overturn the city's ban. Judge Rogers wrote that "the city has not shown that its interest in prohibiting beards and mustaches is rationally related to the city's interest in uniformity, efficiency and appearance." The court will decide in the coming weeks whether the injunction should be made permanent. David Stegner, a spokesman for Detroit's law department, said the city will let the original orders stand while the court reviews the matter. "The city is very pleased with the decision, and will be pursuing its appeal to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit," he said. A Detroit City Council member who supported the ban, Councilman Andre Spivey, said the decision was disappointing. "I would have thought that a free society would have granted people the right to wear any kind of facial hair they wanted," Spivey said. Timothy Andresen, who led the legal challenge to the ban, said the issue is "one of liberty." "You have the First Amendment, but people should have the right to display their religious beliefs," Andresen said. "The right to a clean face is an important part of life in the free society." Andresen's group, Muzzy's House of Beard, had challenged the city
