It was a party in honor of Anthony Bourdain's death, but the "Paris Unknown" fans that had been waiting for this moment all night had to settle for a glimpse of their hero's final moments. The man with the camera was wearing a close-fitting black suit and a hooded jacket when he emerged from the street outside of the apartment. A large sign hung in the same clothes announcing that Bourdain's "death is a result of suicide." But the only reason the man was walking in the street with the sign was because he had been invited inside the apartment, where Bourdain had been dead for more than five hours. "Bourdain is gone, but the story doesn't end here," said his friend Adam Kepner, as the camera pulled back and to a shot of an empty hallway. As Kepner mentioned the end of the story, 2d92cc491b
