Looking for a different solution to your problem? Try our upcoming iOS App. It not only comes with everything, but it's totally free! Many people believe that creative people are difficult to work with, but in the truth there are many great creatives who are easy to get along with. I think one of the reasons that many of them have trouble working with other people is that they are a bit shy. They don't know how to get their ideas out in front of others, and when they get stuck they can be the worst when it comes to sharing the product. I find that most of the people that I collaborate with are creative, and like most creatives I don't want to be the "stuffer" who seems to take over the project. I have seen a lot of discussions on the internet about how to get creative people to work together, and I have heard a lot of different perspectives. When I am working with a new creative person I try and give them a good initial base, and I try to really listen. If they are open to working with others I think it can be very beneficial to the whole project. When I am working with someone I don't make them wait for the right opportunity to give them ideas. It seems that most people don't want to share ideas until they have a good one in mind, but in my experience, when you make a good first impression you are more likely to get them to work with you. When I am working with a new creative person I try and give them a good initial base, and I try to really listen. If they are open to working with others I think it can be very beneficial to the whole project. My best advice is not to try and force ideas upon a creative person, rather let them express their ideas on their own, you should not try to lead them, and you should focus on listening and making them feel comfortable. Even if they don't have an idea in mind when they start collaborating with you, you should encourage them to express their thoughts and ideas. You should not try to lead them, rather listen to them and what they are saying. If they are not comfortable with expressing their ideas, and you start leading them, I think it's going to be very difficult for them to feel comfortable sharing their ideas with you. When it comes to listening, I think there are many people that are good at listening. The problem is that when they are listening
