To avoid the hassle of manually connecting to a network, you can use an automatic switch application that saves the profile of each LAN or wireless connection. Powerful profile creator The program allows you to save each network connection that you use under a profile, along with its settings. You can choose a general name and an icon for that profile, such as “Home” or “Office” for instance, thus helping you to faster recognize each network. Furthermore, you can set the application to automatically switch to a network profile when it detects it, a useful feature for notebooks and laptops, which can easily switch to another wireless connection whenever they come into range. Detailed and extensive settings Plug and Browse can save most settings it detects to a network profile. You have the possibility to choose which network options it can save, ranging from browser settings to mapped drives. Additionally, you can protect your current settings by creating a password that will be prompted each time you run the application. Adaptive network switcher Plug and Browse offers you the chance to skip the hassle of manually connecting to a network, by automatically switching it for you, as long as you previously saved its profile settings. Supported adapter types The software can save LAN settings for all types of adapters, including wired adapters such as Ethernet, USB, FireWire, PCI, PATA and also wireless LAN adapters such as 802.11b/g/n, Bluetooth and many others. What's new in this version Fixed: A crash problem fixed when the script was running on Windows Vista. Added: The user can export the network profile to a HTML file in case he needs to share it with other people. Fixed: Bugs fixed in case the WebDAV protocol was enabled. Added: A new feature that allows the script to switch automatically to the profile just created in case the save function was already running. Fixed: Bug fixed in case the notepad was opened and closed while the profiles were being saved. Known issues Configure settings might be lost after the installer was closed. If your system is running on Windows XP, we advise you to download the script in the offline mode. Requirements Supported OS: XP Vista Server 2008 Server 2003 Other (please specify) System Requirements: Windows 2000/XP/Vista/Server 2008/2003. Publisher: Hello, World, Inc.
